Subject: Parilli's Car

This as you remember was taken up with Daddario in Milano who said car had been left in the garage and orders given to Parilli's brother-in-law to get it. This was partially true. The car had been brought back from Torino damaged and Daddario said Ceserta refused to repair the car. The commission was given to Sergeant Spears who told the cleaning women in Comte Posa's office about the car, but she did not remember to report this to Posa. The car was left for nearly a month, then taken away by British Town Major, and no trace of it can be found up to date.

The car was requisitioned in Lugano from Parilli and the promise given in my presence was that car would be delivered to Parilli in Lugano in a short time. No written engagement was made about this, and Daddario told me that as soon as it was returned from Torino I could have it sent back into Switzerland, but I heard nothing further of this.

Parilli is asking for the money for the car or for a new car of the same value here in Switzerland. If you are still interested in keeping his good will I suppose it should be done, but this is your headache.
